Recent expansion creates a new golf experience contrasting styles. Some are cast in the classic style of tree-lined fairways while others are open and reminiscent of links golf.

And while the old Blue Fox Run gave you ample room off the tee, the new holes require more shotmaking skill, with smaller greens and extensive bunkering.

One of the most challenging of the new holes is the par-3 7th on the Red Course. It's 203 yards long and typically plays into a prevailing wind. Another tester is the 512-yard 5th hole on the White, modeled after the St. Andrews Road Hole because of the deep bunker sitting smack in front of a sloping green.

Several holes on the existing course were also changed dramatically while the new holes were being built. On the White nine, tee boxes were extended to create a 487-yard, par-4 opening hole while new bunkers were built to surround the green of the lengthy 226-yard, par-3 2nd. And the 8th hole, at 642 yards, is now one of the state's longest.

Golfers who haven't played Avon's Blue Fox Run recently will be in for quite a surprise when they do return.

This picturesque course along the Farmington River, in the shadows of Talcott Mountain, now features 27 holes that allow for three distinct 18-hole layouts.

Blue Fox Run introduced nine new holes in 2008 that have completely transformed this popular course in the heart of the Farmington Valley. You can now choose from the challenging par-72 White-Blue layout and its lengthy 7,025 yards. Or, you can opt for two other combinations, each just over 6,200 yards and a par-70.

"The new nine holes have given us incredible flexibility, and it offers golfers variety and choices when they come to Blue Fox Run," says General Manager Barry Wilson. "And it means we can schedule tournaments and outings right along with daily play."
